

Anthony Molloy III, KPHS Class of 1992

When Anthony was still a student at Kings Park High, he took a job in the Planetarium at the Vanderbilt Museum, beginning his journey into Science. After graduation, Anthony spent the next 8 years earning a BS in Chemistry from SUNY Geneseo, a BS in Chemical Engineering from SUNY Buffalo, and an MS in Management from Stevens Institute of Technology. In 2005 he got his JD, Law from Rutgers University. He had signed up for the LSAT on a whim, but soon fell in love with the law and realized his true calling. Anthony believes that a keen eye for detail and problem-solving skills have helped him to achieve success in his career.

After 7 years as senior counsel at Patton Boggs LLC, where he focused on litigation, intellectual property, and commercial contracts, he moved to Pacira Pharmaceuticals, Inc., where he is currently General Counsel and Deputy Compliance Officer.

Anthony's background in litigation helps him to think strategically, measure risk, and see the big picture.

His current position at Pacira has opened his eyes to many new things, in particular the opioid crisis that is plaguing our country. His company manufactures one of the few non-opioid medications available to treat postsurgical pain, and has worked with the American Society for Enhanced Recovery to educate patients about their options.

Anthony is a Licensed Patent Attorney, admitted to both the NY and NJ State Bars, and is a member of American Mensa. He is a Distinguished Alumni from Geneseo, where he often is invited to speak to students.
