

Class of Kings Park High School 1985, Brendan J. Kelly is a product of the modern world of communication. From his days at SUNY Fredonia to the business he maintains today, it is all about artistically providing America with all the knowledge available.

So having said this, who is Brendan J. Kelly? His high school yearbook has a picture, with name, nothing else. Same thing seems to have happened at two colleges. And then suddenly at NBC – the Olympic Games in Korea, Sunday NFL football and working with satellites, and providing multiple services for various editors, his artistic characteristics expanded into magazines, music, T.V.

shows and all forms of advertising agencies. Working with and on such works and channels as A & E, Comedy Central, MTV, Sci-Fi Channel, History Channel, and ESPN just extended his scope of talent. The Missing (Ron Howard), and 270 Miles to Graceland are two notable documentaries that have Kelly's signature attached to them.

He took all this experience and went out into the world on his own. The Bull's Eye Media Services was the present creation. The clients of Bull's Eye reads like the daily T.V. guide listings. Brendan J. Kelly is deeply impregnated in the T.V. production world. The kid barely mentioned in the high school yearbook is mentioned throughout the America. Talk about making a success of yourself, just follow Brendan's path. There's something for Kings Park to know about Mr. Kelly. As is the case of so many others from Kings Park. Kelly just keeps blooming into a larger accomplisher in his profession.
