

Dave Weinstein is a Bay Area author and journalist who has written two books about architecture and design, “Signature Architects of the San Francisco Bay Area,” a history of Bay Area architecture told through the life stories of some of its most significant practitioners, and the text for “Berkeley Rocks: Building with Nature,” with photographs by Jonathan Chester, about the landscape and architecture of the Berkeley Hills.

Dave, who grew up in Kings Park on Long Island, studied art history at Columbia University and journalism at UC-Berkeley.

David has published books on Berkeley, San Francisco, and a series on great buildings in popular locations and believe it or not, a book entitled “Where Recycling Is A Pleasure”. All this leads to being on prestigious clubs and organizations. Among them are East Bay Club, Philanthropy by Design and a Recycling Task Force.

David recently visited Kings Park and his written of what he remembers from 40 years ago and how it matches up with today’s Kings Park is a treat to read. The clarity and emotion makes for just plain clean truth.

Teacher, environmentalist, designer, journalist, author, communicator and preservationist. A wide spectrum of interest and the energy to lead to success in all ventures.
