You hardly ever see her, she makes very little noise, and she never seems to bother you. But Philene Paulino Abraham has been a continual adjunct to the Kings Park Heritage Museum for 20 years.

A graduate of Kings Park High School, Class of 1982, she graduated from R.I.T. in 1986 and took a position in dad's business, Official Offset Printing Company. Then four important things took place in her life. The Kings Park Heritage Museum was created, she married, Greg, and two children were born. Work was good, family was great, and the Museum prospered.

A pledging museum with no money, very little space, and probably limited brains, was given a book script concerning Kings Park history. Despite all the negative conditions, the Paulino family took on the task of publishing the Miles Borden gift. This was Philene's first Kings Park Heritage Museum burden. Because of her skills, talent, and dedication, the Heritage Museum has been able to create and have published seven historical related books. To be able to mentor totally inexperienced individuals who are attempting to work beyond their abilities is a premier teaching accomplishment. The Greeks in the past had said that art is a combination of skill and emotion. Philene has utilized the two necessities into making the Heritage Museum and town itself look first rate.
