

Regina Chace has forged a formidable career in both military and civilian education. A student at Kings Park High School in the 1970s, Regina moved West and built an impressive resume in psychoanalysis and mental health services. Her studies led her to receive an undergraduate degree from the University of Southern California, and both master's and doctoral degrees from the California School of Professional Psychology. The author of dozens of professional publications, Regina also created a number of training films on topics such as Stress Management and the Handling of Suicide Callers. She is the founder and CEO of Dr.911.com.Inc., a resource website and web-based news and health care magazine for emergency public safety professionals. She developed the comprehensive Wounded Warrior Pre and Post Deployment Critical Stress Prevention Program for Joint Services and has direct experience in complex forensic assessment and intervention.

Throughout the years, Regina worked as the Chief Resident in Psychology at Andrews Air Force Base, was Chief of Psychological Services at Wiesbaden Air Base Hospital in Germany and at Edwards Air Force Base in California, served as Chief of Behavioral Medicine at Nellis Air Force Base in Las Vegas, and managed operations and clinical services at the Delaware State Department of Child and Family Services, among many other duties. She is currently the Supervising Psychologist for Mental Health Services at the Naval Health Clinic in Annapolis, Maryland.

An advocate for women, children, and first responders, Regina Chace has focused her efforts on finding ways for people in stressful situations to cope. Clearly, Regina is a driving force for good!
