

How does one become a Superintendent of a major Long Island, NY school district? By teaching in classrooms first and then ascending through the labyrinth of educational levels. Roberta Anne Gerold has done it all in nearly forty years as an educator. She has taught from high school through several colleges. She has written tens of thousands of words of various aspects of education. Recently she has co-authored a book Accentuating Integrity. With over twenty years of professorship in various colleges, Roberta has been a communicator in every way. “Letters” have been her “meat & potatoes” and Long Island and education have been better because of that.
