

The English teacher, when the guidance counselor brought him, was told this kid is blind. The kid, when he talked to the English teacher, said "I don't consider myself blind and I don't wish any special favors." He proved his point by attaining 80's in a difficult reading course. Ronald Tascarella has always been an inspiration to that English teacher. An official in the banking world, Ron has managed a museum, sat on several visually impaired support organizations and inspires the impaired to read and write. With a family and an active community role, Ron still needs no special favors. He has taught as much as he has learned.
