

A Kings Park High School Class of 1970 graduate, William G. Kleindienst followed by fabled statement, "Go West, young man," and through the University of Arizona, landed in California and there the story grows.

Moved to Palm Spring, California, married, became an architect, helped raise three children and somehow contributed 10 ten years of his life to Palm Springs as Councilman and Mayor. Bill is a perfect example of what, as a society, we often don't pay attention to – he is an energy machine. He is always active, creative, interested and willing to take the wheel to attain success. This is a community man of high level talent.

Architecturally he creates, directs, and changes the world around him. Socially, as a Mayor, he maintained, preserved and highlighted that peoples' world. William has taken every bit of his diverse talent and made it fully visible to those around him.

No one path is good for everyone, but paths filled with accomplishments, happiness, and excitements are paths worth paying attention to. Listening to William Kleindienst is to listen to a man not finished with seeking and creating. Ralph Emerson, has essays that denote the triumph of Kleindienst's life.
